First, information developed by security that Thomas was taking medication and had not indicated it on his first examination, and second, that he had been medically evacuated from Venezuela and had not reported that.

In fact, neither assertion had any foundation. At his first examination, it was suggested that Mr. Thomas should lose weight even though he was within departmental standards. He subsequently saw his own doctor and received a diet and a prescription. Mr. Thomas had answered the question honestly and had nothing to hide; he was in fact the source of the information "developed" by security. The situation could have been resolved by phone calls to Mr. Thomas, his doctor, or the pharmacy. But medical did not take that step until after the second physical.

The medical evacuation simply was not true and a phone call to ACTION would have confirmed that.

So medical, instead of making two to four phone calls, ordered the very expensive procedure of a full second medical examination even though it was improper under the Department's own procedures manual.

Even though there was no information to indicate that there was reason for a psychiatric examination, one was ordered. The memorandum ordering the exam is astonishing:

In addition to this, while serving as a Peace Corps Director in Venezuela, his performance was so adamant and trying to the Peace Corps that he was recalled home. Because he was suddenly called home, he launched a grievance against the Peace Corps, the status of which I believe at the present time is not active. There was a statement, however, to the fact that he did not appear to even know what the job was all about while serving in the Peace Corps in Venezuela.

For this reason, the need for psychiatric interview seems to be indicated to be held in conjunction with his second physical exam.

This narrative is sharply at variance with the one I have read into the RECORD. But mine is based on an extensive body of records from ACTION, State, and the Civil Service Commission. The doctor's version, regretfully, is based on malice and distortion. Thomas was not recalled, he was transferred on the basis of a hearing examiner's recommendation. His appeal was no longer active, because he had won. The allegations about performance, in that face of the Civil Service hearing examiner's findings, is simply slander.

It seems clear from the tone of the memo and its specific wording that there is some kind of oral history to this case. Certainly, these ugly assertions came from somewhere other than the official record from which the doctor was supposed to be working.

The psychiatrist refused to be used for the purpose and went far further than required in finding Mr. Thomas totally qualified from a psychiatric viewpoint.

But, by using figures from the first or second examinations as happened to suit his purpose, the doctor who wrote this memo developed three specific, if somewhat borderline, grounds for medical disqualification. I think the blood pressure is a good example of how this was done.

On the first examination, Mr. Thomas' BP was well within limits. At the second physical, with Walt Thomas now unemployed and aware that some problem had developed, he was subjected to an interrogation—intended to make it clear that all his problems at ACTION had followed him—and promptly thereafter tested for blood pressure. Under this kind of psychological pressure a diastolic reading two points over normal was obtained and used as grounds for disqualification.

In response to my request for "any and all reasons for medical disqualification," the doctor, in a letter signed by Assistant Secretary McCloskey, listed obesity. Yet Thomas was within published limits on his first examination. By the time of his second examination, after starting the diet suggested by State, Thomas had lost 11 pounds and was 20 pounds under the published limit. Confronted by this prevarication during an EEO investigation, obesity was dropped as grounds; a new disqualification was listed, which had not been included in the letter sent in response to my request for any and all reasons.

Mr. Speaker, it is with deep regret that I have asked leave to address the House today. For I am required to present a larger issue than Walt Thomas' personal tragedy or even the total failure of the State Department minority hiring program. Mr. Thomas pursued all the avenues of appeal Congress has opened to protect Federal employees from racism. Yet men in the Department of State, who consider those who fight for their rights, troublemakers, have devised a covert system for thwarting the will of Congress, of the President, and the management of their own Department.

If they can succeed, all the laws we have enacted might just as well be repealed. If they can succeed, then the Founding Fathers have failed; and ours will have become a government, not of laws, but of men.

CONGRESSIONAL PAY RAISE

The SPEAKER. Under a previous order of the House, the gentlewoman from Maryland (Mrs. SPELLMAN) is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mrs. SPELLMAN. Mr. Speaker, I am adamantly opposed to the manner in which the Presidential Commission's pay proposal is being handled by this Congress, for I feel it is the right of every American to know how his Representative would vote on this measure if it were allowed to come before this House for a recorded vote. I have expressed these views, along with my request for such a vote, in identical letters to the Honorable ROBERT NIX, chairman of the Post Office and Civil Service Committee, and the Honorable WILLIAM FORD, chairman of the Ad Hoc Committee on Presidential Pay Recommendations. At this time, I would like to share the contents of those letters with my colleagues:

FEBRUARY 15, 1977.

DEAR MR. CHAIRMAN: I strongly believe that it would be most unfortunate to have the Presidential Commission's pay proposal languish in Committee past the effective date without having it come before the full House to be voted upon. The scores of phone calls and letters from my constituents bear out my beliefs that the American people share my concern over the manner in which the Congress is dealing with the issue.

It is my sincere desire to see an appropriate resolution be considered on the floor of the House regarding the proposal, and I respectfully urge your assistance in effecting that action.

Sincerely,

GLADYS NOON SPELLMAN,
Member of Congress.

THE HISTORIC PRESERVATION POLICY ACT OF 1977

The SPEAKER. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. SEIBERLING) is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. SEIBERLING. Mr. Speaker, I am today introducing the National Historic Preservation Policy Act of 1977, to establish a national policy and a coordinated program for historic preservation. The legislation would, for the first time, provide a focal point for the many and varied historic preservation efforts in our Nation and provide Federal leadership and support for historic preservation both at home and abroad.

The concept of historic preservation in the United States has expanded greatly in recent years. What started in the 19th century as a small movement to save certain historically significant sites and buildings—like Mount Vernon and Monticello and Independence Hall—now embraces entire towns and city neighborhoods—such as the village of Peninsula near my home in Ohio, Chinatown in San Francisco, a barrio in San Antonio, a farming area in Greensprings, Va.

Today, people are finding that historic preservation makes good sense, both economically and esthetically. As the Advisory Council on Historic Preservation has pointed out:

Preservation activities are significantly more labor intensive than new construction . . . 109 jobs per million dollars are created through renovation as compared to 69 jobs per million for new construction.

Throughout our country, adaptive use has become a way of giving new life to old structures. This has happened at Quaker Square in Akron, where a 19th century mill has been transformed into a shopping complex. In several cities, unused railroad stations are being converted into commercial and cultural centers. The Old Main Post Office in Washington, D.C.—once threatened with demolition—is now being revived for use as Federal office space. Decaying neighborhoods are being revitalized and preserved, not as museum pieces but as living communities, adapted to modern society but retaining their original character, scale, and charm.

CONGRESSIONAL ACTIONS

The growing interest and the growing needs of historic preservation have had an effect on Congress. Last year alone, three major bills were enacted that will directly benefit the preservation movement:

The Land and Water Conservation Fund Act was amended to include an historic preservation fund, with moneys derived from offshore oil revenues. This fund will raise authorizations for the matching grant program for historic preservation from the present $24.5 million a year to $100 million a year in 1978 and 1979 and to $150 million in 1980 and 1981.

The Public Buildings Cooperative Use Act will require the Federal Government, for the first time, to look at historical and architecturally significant buildings before constructing new office facilities.

The Tax Reform Act of 1976 contains tax incentives for preserving historic properties and disincentives for demolishing them. The act also expands the qualifications for deductions of donations for conservation easements on both natural and historic properties.

In addition, historic preservation benefited from the recent Public Works Act, earmarked for projects in areas of high unemployment, which gave special points to projects for restoring properties on the National Register of Historic Places. The Park Mining Act provides for a 2-year study by the Advisory Council on Historic Preservation to determine what steps can be taken by the Federal Government to protect natural and historic landmarks from surface mining and similar activities.

PRESENT PROBLEMS

I think that I can safely say that in the 1970's there has been a renaissance of historic preservation actions in Congress. Yet we have not begun to match what the people themselves have been doing. Ours has been a catch-up game, and we are still running far behind.

For example, in 1966 the National Historic Preservation Act was enacted to establish a partnership between the Federal Government and the States for historic preservation. However, the Federal Government has never lived up to its share of that partnership. Last year the administration requested only $10 million for the State grant program. Congress upped that to $17.5 million. Yet the States had certified requests for over $200 million. This year's requested budget—the previous administration's proposal—is for $35 million, nearly two-thirds less than the amount authorized by Congress.

In 1973, the United States was the first Nation to ratify the World Heritage Convention, adopted by the UNESCO General Conference. The Convention affirms that it is the duty of national governments to conserve the cultural and natural resources that are of universal significance. The United States has, as yet, developed no process or procedures for implementing our role in that program.

At home, our preservation efforts on the Federal level have lacked both focus and definition. Several departments and agencies deal with various aspects of historic preservation—the National Park Service, the Advisory Council on Historic Preservation, the Department of Housing and Urban Development, to name a few. No single one of them has been given the clear authority to guide or monitor Federal historic preservation programs.

In 1971, Presidential Executive Order 11593 was issued, directing Federal agencies to adopt measures for the identification and nomination of properties in their ownership which may be eligible for National Register listing. The Executive order has never been fully implemented. As a result, Federal agencies often make decisions without any knowledge of the historic properties that will be affected. The burden of historic proof is too often shouldered by the States and localities, with little support from the Federal agencies who are making the decisions.

LEADERSHIP FOR PRESERVATION

Last fall, President Carter emphasized the need for leadership in national historic preservation efforts when he wrote, to the National Trust for Historic Preservation:

The World Heritage Convention is the starting point on the international level for nourishing the sense of preservation that must emerge from all of us at home. We must make conservation of our cultural heritage a priority in our nation, a goal to be shared with other nations as well. . . . We must offer federal support and leadership in this effort, both here and abroad, to preserve and protect those elements that are of local and state and national and universal significance.

The legislation I am introducing today, the National Historic Preservation Act of 1977, is directed at meeting the goals which President Carter so eloquently articulated. The bill would establish a national policy, consistent with the U.S. obligations under the World Heritage Convention, that the Federal Government has a duty to preserve and enhance this Nation's historic and cultural resources and to cooperate with other nations—and with States, local communities, and private organizations and individuals—in the preservation of their significant historic and cultural resources.

To implement this policy and to insure a coordinated national program that complements existing State programs, the bill would focus administration of the national historic preservation program in one agency, the Council on Historic Preservation—formerly the Advisory Council on Historic Preservation. The bill directs the Council to coordinate, in cooperation with the Department of State, the U.S. activities pursuant to the World Heritage Convention. The Council would be given the necessary authority to carry out the national historic preservation program, including providing technical assistance and establishing a program, in cooperation with the National Trust for Historic Preservation, for the emergency acquisition of properties listed in the National Register of Historic Places threatened with immediate demolition.

In addition, the bill would provide all Federal departments with the necessary authority to carry out their responsibilities under the act, including clarification of their responsibilities to identify historic and cultural properties. It would authorize the Secretary of the Interior to study federally owned properties included in the National Register and recommend to Congress those which should be managed by the National Park Service.

The legislation would establish guidelines for the use of the Historic Preservation Fund to provide the National Trust for Historic Preservation with a floor on its annual allocations and to provide for a 10-percent contingency reserve account for up to 2 fiscal years for the fund. It would permit fund moneys to be used on projects receiving other Federal assistance. Fund money could not, however, be used to match any other Federal funds. It would also authorize Federal agencies to spend their funds to maintain properties included in the National Register under their jurisdiction or control and to reimburse State historic preservation agencies for up to 75 percent of the costs for administrative and preservation review activities undertaken by Federal agencies to fulfill their responsibilities for such properties.

Mr. Speaker, the historic preservation movement in our country began as a people's movement, which emerged from the love, dedication, and work of individuals who realized the value of preserving for the future the significant elements of our past. The National Historic Preservation Policy Act of 1977 would build upon their efforts and provide the needed leadership and direction on both the national and international levels. Most importantly, it would assure that the Federal Government coordinates its efforts with State, local, and private activities—to bring back the movement to where it began, with the people.

I urge my colleagues to support this legislation.

LITHUANIAN DAY

The SPEAKER. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from California (Mr. CORMAN) is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. CORMAN. Mr. Speaker, it is my privilege to know some Lithuanians personally. My experience has been that they are bright, industrious and, in the main, beautiful people.
